Ben-Gurion Is Bent On Vote Reform

If Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion has his way, the Parliamentary election set for November 3 will be the last of its kind. Mr. Ben-Gurion does not wish to abolish elections but seeks to rid Israel of proportional representation which he blames for many of the country's political ills. He wants to replace the present system, under which the voter casts his ballot for a party list and not for individual candidates, with direct, constituency voting.

The Premier is attempting to turn proportional representation, not exactly a bread-and-butter matter for the average voter, into one of the burning issues of the campaign, says the New York Herald Tribune. In a country which has many parties and has never given a single party more than 40 per cent of the vote, Mr. Ben-Gurion has demanded an absolute majority for his Mapai Labor party as a necessary prelude to electoral reform.

The veteran politician has promised or warned — depending on your viewpoint — that, if Mapai wins a majority in the next Knesset (Parliament), the Knesset would be called into session for one and only one purpose — to divide the country into parliamentary districts (constituencies) and to provide for direct election of Knesset members, one for each district. Having done this, the Knesset would immediately be dissolved and a new election would be held in the new way.

Most of the country's other established parties, ever suspicious of Mapai as Israel's largest party, oppose the abolition of proportional representation. They talk of the glories of pure democracy, of the need for political diversity to reflect the considerable diversity of an immigrant country, of the threat of "Mapai dictatorship."

The Ben-Gurion argument goes like this: proportional representation inevitably results in a multiplicity of parties. There were twelve parties represented in the last Knesset, and twenty-six lists of candidates are competing for places in the next Knesset. This multitude of parties, in turn, means instability in government, lengthy negotiations to set up a coalition and delicate, frequent negotiations to keep it going, says the New York Herald Tribune. The present system, Mr. Ben Gurion says, encourages demagogues dissension and confusion.

A "free and democratic state," the Premier contends, needs only two parties — a majority party and a second large party which can provide an alternative to the party in power. A two-party system "educates the public to the need for political compromise" rather than "rigid and dogmatic factionalism."

The small, liberal Progressive party, though it has been a faithful coalition partner of Mapai through most of Israel's history, has taken the lead in fighting Mr. Ben-Gurion on this issue and charges that what Mapai "really wants is permanent, sole control . . . the introduction of an electoral system that will turn a minority into a majority."

Orthodox Head Doubts Hebrew Can Link Jews Of U. S. And Israel

The head of the largest Jewish Orthodox rabbinic group in the U. S. asserted at a conference, that the study of the Hebrew language "is not enough" to link American Jews and Israeli Jews. Rabbi Emanuel Rackman, president of the Rabbinical Council of America, said that any close cultural and religious ties between both must be based "on the historical teachings, values, and concepts found in the Bible and Talmud."

The Council's twenty-third annual conference had five hundred Orthodox rabbis attending the meeting, says the New York Times. The Council has a membership of 750 serving more than 1,000,000 Orthodox congregants.

In emphasizing that the Hebrew language cannot be the primary force in linking American and Israeli Jews, Rabbi Rackman differed sharply from views expressed recently by Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion of Israel and Philip M. Klutznick, former president of Bnai Brith. At the recent Bnai Brith conference in Jerusalem, both underscored the importance of the Hebrew language as a link between Israel and the Jews the world over.

Rabbi Rackman maintained that relations between American and Israeli Jews would be strengthened considerably if the Israeli Government "gave more recognition to its outstanding religious heritage and placed greater stress on its Talmudic and Biblical backgrounds as the foundation stones in shaping the nascent state."

At the same time, the religious leader emphasized that "there is no lawful discrimination against any Israeli inhabitant because of his viewpoint, opinion, or creed." "Israel's Orthodox rabbinate", Rabbi Rackman said, "does not control or dominate the religious practices of Israel's population." Israel's religious leaders, he went on, "only desire that the legal order of the state shall conform with historic Jewish jurisprudence."

"They wish," he continued, "to substantiate Hebraic systems of laws for the currently existing British, French, and Turkish forms and legalisms. No one is denied the right in Israel to publish the most heretical views and to propagate such views in governmental media of communication."

Rabbi Rackman criticized those American Jews who, he said, "are resorting to slogan thinking about the problems of religious freedom in Israel," says the New York Times. "Those distorted versions of the status of constitutional freedom in Israel," he said, "are responsible for the humiliation of American Jews and declination of loyalty to the structure and faith of Judaism."

Rabbi Rackman, the leader of Congregation Shaaray Tefila, Far Rockaway, Queens, called for the establishment of a world-wide union of religious Jews "to foster a greater degree of cohesion and strength for Orthodox Judaism."

Rumania Arrests Jews For "Zionist Activity"

The American Jewish Congress appealed to the Rumanian government to release more than a score of Jewish community leaders and rabbis arrested in recent months for so-called "Zionist activity." Ira Guilden, chairman of the organization's commission on international affairs, said reports reaching the AJCongress told of the separation of mothers from small children, the imprisonment of the aged and ailing, and other cases of personal hardship resulting from police action.

Among those arrested since March of this year, Mr. Guilden said, were persons first seized during the period from 1949-1953 who were released in 1954-55 under a general amnesty or upon completing their sentences. Many of these men and women have now been arrested again in Bucharest as well as in the cities of Vaslui, Tulcea, Orasul, Stalin, Galati, Moinesti, and Constanta, he reported.

The recent arrests included those of two sisters, Magda and Elizabeta Herzl, relatives of Theodor Herzl, the founder of Zionism. The American Jewish Congress spokesman said Magda Herzl was sentenced to ten years imprisonment for allegedly transmitting literature from the Israel legation in Bucharest. No formal charges have been filed against Elizabeth Herzl, who had been an employee of the Israel legation and who is still being held. Mr. Guilden cited the case of Efraim Singer, a writer for the local newspaper in the city of Cluj, who was sentenced to twenty years' imprisonment for "attempting to smuggle forbidden material abroad." The "forbidden material," Mr. Guilden said, consisted of a number of poems Mr. Singer had written which had already been approved for publication in the local newspaper, and which he mailed to his brother in Israel.

Mr. Guilden told of the arrest last April in Galati of Lupu and Rosa Sames, a young couple who had been part of a group of Jewish youths training for farm life in Israel more than ten years before such activity had been outlawed in Rumania. When they were arrested Mr. and Mrs. Sames were forced to leave their two children at home unattended. Mrs. Sames, who was in the final months of pregnancy, has since had a still-born infant in a prison hospital. The fate of Mr. Sames and the two small children remains unknown.

Among those released from prison in 1954-55 and arrested again in recent months, according to the AJCongress official, were Dr. Leo Fried, of Timisoara, former secretary of the Zionist Organization of Transylvania, who is suffering from tuberculosis; and Lajos Gardos, Stefan Krausz, Magda Wess-

RENOWNED ART CRITIC WAS AUTHENTICATOR OF ALMOST ALL COLLECTIONS IN U.S., WORKED UNTIL 90

Bernard Berenson, pioneer expert on Italian Renaissance painting, who died in his villa, I Tatti, at Settingnano in the hills overlooking Florence, had celebrated his ninety-fourth birthday June 26.

Mr. Berenson's death was a blow to the City of Florence, which he had singled out for his residence, which had a deep affection for him, and which made him an honorary citizen in 1949, says the New York Times. Count Lorenzo Salazar, Government commissioner administering the municipality of Florence, was among the first to reach I Tatti after the famous art critic and historian's death.

The funeral service was held in the hilltop Church of San Martino of Mansola, a short distance form the villa where Mr. Berenson, the pioneer authority on Italian Renaissance art, died.

The Vatican disclosed that the frail, white-bearded critic, who was Jewish by birth and who was converted to Roman Catholicism, had received "a special benediction" from Pope John XXIII to comfort him in his last moments.

Mr. Berenson's body was carried from his villa to the church in a procession that might well have made the subject for one of the paintings he loved so dearly. Four peasants acted as honorary pallbearers. They were preceded by five priests, one bearing aloft a crucifix, a group of children carrying red and white flowers, and nine Federal policemen in full dress.

Then followed a group of Italian nobility and civil officials. United States Vice Consul Joseph Cunningham and French Consul Jean Charvit were among those in the cortege.

"Signed Bernard Berenson" was one of the most efficient agents for the sale of a painting that an owner could obtain. Mr. Berenson had acted as adviser or authenticator on almost every significant art collection gathered in the United States in his time. He had a monumental library of 40,000 books, which he bequeathed to Harvard University, to assist him in his work. He also wrote more than a score of his own on the exacting science of art criticism.

An association between Mr. Berenson and the late Lord Duveen, the art dealer, lasted thirty years, says the New York Times. Mr. Berenson served him as an adviser on Italian paintings. Judgment in disputed art cases often hinged on Mr. Berenson's expert testimony.

The influence of the frail, white-bearded scholar on art authorities of the world was almost legendary. Chief curators of the greatest art collections of the world traveled to Florence to stroll with him in his garden and exchange ideas with him and learn from him.

Mr. Berenson was credited with "discovering" one and perhaps two unknown Renaissance painters, whom he called Alunno di Dominico and Amico di Sandro. The first later was identified as as Bartolomeo di Giovanni, but Amico remained undocumented.

Mr. Berenson's famous method of identifying works of art was simple. He defined it in 1957 in a conversation with Francis Henry Taylor, late director of the Metropolitan Museum of Art and at that time director of the Worcester Museum of Art.

"Identity of characteristics indicates identity of origin," Mr. Berenson said. "What distinguishes one artist from another is the characteristics he does not share with others. . . . To isolate the characteristics of an artist, we take all his works of undoubted authenticity, and we proceed to discover those traits that invariably recur in them, but not in the works of other masters."

Born in Lithuania in 1865, Mr. Berenson was brought to the U.S. by his parents at the age of ten years. He attended Boston Latin School and was a struggling student at Boston University when he came under the patronage of Mrs. [illegible] Gardner. She sent him to Harvard and in turn sought his assistance in assembling her famous $3,000,000 art collection.

It was the patronage of the Bostonian that sent him on his way toward what he termed in later life "a troublesome reputation as an expert." Following his graduation in 1887 from Harvard, where he and George Santayana were students of William James and Charles Eliot Norton, he hurried immediately to Europe to study the great art of the past and to train his eye to recognize styles and techniques of the masters.

He studied at Oxford, Paris, and Berlin before going to Italy where he elected to live for the rest of his life. He demonstrated his determination to get ahead and his ingenuity in pursuit of this aim by the use he made of the time spent studying in the famous art galleries of Florence, says the New York Times. He supplemented his small yearly allowance by competing with regular gallery guides at discount prices.

By 1900, when he returned to Oxford to marry Mary Logan Whitall Smith Costelloe, sister of the essayist, Logan Pearsall Smith, he had written four small books on Italian paintings, had been recognised as an expert art authenticator and had enough money to buy a villa near Florence.

He took his bride, a Philadelphia Quaker and friend of Walt Whitman, to I Taiti, which was to become a center for art scholars, philosophers and famous friends of the critic. The forty-room eighteenth century mansion was restored by Mr. Berenson, complete with an Italian formal garden. He described it as "spacious and comfortable, yet with a touch of old Italian severity."

Rooms of the graceful old mansion reflected the critic's eye and taste. He furnished them fastidiously with antiques of the Tuscan Renaissance and decorated them with paintings, sculptures and ornaments of that period. Edith Wharton often visited Mr. Berenson at his villa and based a novelette on him. Another of his famous walking companions was Marcel Proust, whose "Remembrance of Things Past" reflects Mr. Berenson's theories on art.

Although well-established as an art critic by 1900, Mr. Berenson was little known to the general public until he emerged after World War II as a philosopher, scholar, and humanist in a trilogy of more or less autobiographical works, "Sketch for a Self-Portrait," "Aesthetics and History", and "Rumor and Reflection."

The books had been written during the war, while Mr. Berenson, because of his Jewish origin, had

Brazil's Jews In A Hospitable Haven Where Racialism Is Unknown

BY VOITECH WINTERSTEIN

One of the most striking examples of the dangers which material prosperity and political security present to a mixed Jewish population is provided by Brazil. This enormous country, 65 times the size of England, bigger than the whole of Europe excluding Russia, contains 140,000 Jews from all parts of Europe, the Near East and North Africa. It offers them a fair measure of personal freedom; there is less anti-Semitism and discrimination perhaps even than in England; economic success can be achieved more easily than in the United States, in spite of an inflationary spiral; the status at the beginning of the sixteenth century, and Jewish residents were persecuted by the Inquisition at the end of that century. The first Jewish community tus of the citizen is little affected by bureaucracy — naturalisation comes almost automatically after five years.

But all these benefits do not conceal from the leaders of the community the threats of creeping assimilation to the youth in this prosperous and attractive country. Their fears spring from two main facts. Only about one-fifth of the Jewish students attend the 28 Jewish schools, all of which are relatively well adjusted day establishments. And the new generation does not participate fully in Jewish everyday life.

Although the challenge by the young for the leadership of the community reflects an understandable impatience with the authority of their seniors, they are not prepared yet to take over, nor are they ready to fight for the succession. At least half of the new Jewish Brazilian generation, which is the third generation at most, consists of immigrants, although many have been naturalized. But the new and the old generations live in two different worlds and have only few common interests.

On the whole one does not like to speak in Brazil about the history of Jews — they like the present and think of the future — but their history in Brazil overflows with unique features. There were already some leading Jewish figures among the first Portuguese conquerors of the country. A community of some thousand people flourished in Pernambuco under the Dutch occupation in the seventeenth century and 28 of these early settlers left to build the Jewish community in New Amsterdam which today is New York. The Sephardi group in Pernambuco later disintegrated, leaving only a cemetery as evidence of its existence.

The second stage of settlement began at the end of the nineteenth century when Sephardi elements immigrated from North Africa and the Near East. They were followed later by Ashkenazim from Russia, who overtook the Sephardim in numbers about the time of the first world war. As a result of a subsequent influx of Ashkenazim mainly from Bessarabia, and from Germany in the 30's they now outnumber the Sephardim by about seven to one. In the long history of Brazil only once — during the dictatorship — was Jewish immigration formally prevented.

The Jewish settlers are concentrated in and around the capitals of only eight of the 21 states of the United States of Brazil. Rio Grande do Sul, colonised originally by the ICA, is the only state in which one can find a few smaller Jewish settlements of 50 families or so. Even there, the capital, Porto Alegre, is a magnet for the children of the colonists.

The other isolated individuals or families dispersed throughout the states and territories of this vast country, are doomed to disappear as Jews because of the lack of organised communication with the Jewish centres. Rio de Janeiro, and still more Sao Paulo, attract not only 95 per cent of the new Jewish immigrants but also Jews from some of the other capitals. As a result the once flourishing Jewish centres of Fortaleza (Ceara) and Natal (Rio Grande do Norte) have been liquidated by steady emigration. It looks as if the next victim on the list will be the once important community of Salvador (Bahia), which at present has about 600 Jews.

Still growing are the communities of Curitiba (1,800), Belo Horizonte (1,600) and Recife (2,000) and Belem and Manaus, each with about 500 Jews, are maintaining their strength. In Rio de Janeiro, with about 45,000 Jews, Sao Paulo, with about 55,000, and Porto Alegre, with 12,000, the Jews make up about one and a half to two per cent of the population. Though all the immigrant Jews came from countries in which they lived in Kehillath, only the Central European (i.e. the German) Jews have been able up to now to organise themselves in this traditional pattern. In Rio and Sao Paulo, they have their own synagogues and rabbis with paid membership and their own Chevra Kadisha, but in Porto Alegre they are without a rabbi.

The Ostjuden as well as the Sephardim group themselves round their funeral society and cemetery and their many — often far too many — philanthropic, cultural, educational, and political institutions. Only after the second world war did they and the German Jews organise themselves into Federations of Jewish institutions in the various capitals and finally, in 1951, into the central national confederation of the eight federations of Brazil. This arrangement is one of the many fortunate examples of initiative by the World Jewish Congress.

The picture of dynamic Jewry in this tropical and partly sub-tropical country is a colourful one. Jews from East, West, and Central Europe freely mix with those from Morocco, Egypt, Turkey, Syria, the Lebanon and Iraq (the East Europeans are mainly of Bessarabian origin). They carry on all kinds of business, from peddling to the export-import trade, and also run small industries — mainly building construction — but there are a few artisans as well. Lately they have penetrated the liberal professions, except perhaps the fine arts, with a preference for engineering (Brazil has visibly growing possibilities for every kind of production).

Then there are the German Jews with their thoroughly organised life and liberal worship, acting in the federations and the confederation together with the organisation-shy Orthodox or unbelieving East European Jews and the Hispano-Portuguese or Arabian Sephardi Jews, united in love for Israel and in a degree of sacrifice for the Jewish cause.

There is no essentially Jewish proletariat and the few farmers in the south are slowly declining in number. The modest group of poor is more or less cared for by the many philanthropic institutions, in the old age homes and orphanages (of which there are three each in Rio and Sao Paulo), in hospitals and clinics. In Sao Paulo a campaign has just started to build a big Jewish hospital, to be named after Albert Einstein, which is to serve Jews and non-Jews, poor and rich alike.

Business and industry are far from being a Jewish near-monopoly, as was the case in some European countries. The Arabs, for instance, who form a bigger minority than the Jews, are formidable competitors in these fields. Politically the Arabs have not crossed swords with the Jews; they live as a rule on quite good terms with each other, a phenomenon which will be easily understood when it is seen that most Arabs are Lebanese or Christians. Some sectors of business, however, such as the diamond and furniture trades are predominantly Jewish.

Jews also occupy the upper rungs of the social ladder or are ascending towards them. Thus Dr. Horacio Lafer, a member of the executive of the Jewish Federation in Sao Paulo, was for two years Minister of Finance. There are two Jewish members of Parliament. Dr. Aron Steinbruck, president of the Jewish Federation in Rio, and Dr. Salo Brand, of the Hebraica in Rio. Others are to be found in the Chambers of Deputies in their states, and in the municipalities. None of them was elected by a "Jewish vote" which does not exist in Brazil, although about 50,000 Jews are eligible to vote for candidates of some dozen political parties.

In the big industries the conscious Jewish element is represented by the Klabin family (cellulose, paper, tiles); Fetter (paper); Kopenhagen (chocolate); and in the larger constructional industry by Dr. Regina Feigl, wife of Professor F. Feigl. Professor Feigl, the world-renowned chemist, chief of Microchemical Research Department of the Ministry of Agriculture, honorary citizen of Rio, and honorary member of a score of universities and scientific institutions the world over, including Israel, holds one of the most prominent places in science, a field in which many Jews are represented. He is also president of the Jewish Confederation.

In addition there are many Jewish writers (the most famous of whom is Dr. Pedro Bloch), journalists and musicians.

But in spite of the 28 schools and six rabbis, with about 18 synagogues and botei midrashim, frequented mainly on the High Holy

Menachem Beigin, Herut Party Head, Is Controversial Figure In Israel Election

There was a £10,000 ($28,000) price on his head less than twelve years ago; he looks like an obscure bank clerk. He makes violent attacks on the government, his voice rising almost to a scream; he is extremely polite, even gallant, and has a habit of kissing ladies' hands, writes Alvin Rosenfeld from Jerusalem for the New York Herald Tribune.

He is viewed by some as an arrant publicity seeker; he serves faithfully in a virtually unknown Parliamentary sub-committee on Hebrew legal terminology. He is accused of being a demagogue and a "Fascist"; he is respected in Parliament as an able constitutional lawyer. He dominates his party; he is considered to be poor at political maneuvering. His followers heap adulation upon him; his political foes detest him.

This controversial and paradoxical figure is Menachem Beigin, head of the nationalistic Herut party. There are two dozen parties and hundreds of politicians competing in Israel's forthcoming Parliamentary election, but as far as the public is concerned the chief protagonists are seventy-two-year-old Prime Minister Ben-Gurion and forty-six-year-old Menachem Beigin.

Mr. Beigin, once head of the Irgun Zvei Leumi underground which ambushed British soldiers and bombed British installations in mandated Palestine, has led Herut for a decade but has never approached power. Today he feels — or at least expresses — firm confidence in victory.

Born in 1913 in the Polish city of Brest-Litovsk, he received a thorough Hebrew grounding as well as a general education and was a Zionist from his early teens. He was sixteen when he joined the youth movement of the Zionist Revisionists, a group of Right-wing revolutionaries who condemned the regular Zionist leadership as timid and misguided. Then and through the years the dispute over Revisionism was surrounded by passion and bitterness, says the New York Herald Tribune. In joining the Revisionists, Mr. Beigin joined a powerful but an opposition force; he has been in the opposition to this day.

Trained as a lawyer at Warsaw University, Mr. Beigin did not practice but devoted himself full time to his Zionist work. On the eve of World War II he became head of the youth movement's 100,000-man Polish section.

When war came, he and his young wife fled before the Nazis to Vilna in Lithuania. There a year later the Soviets arrested him, charged him with illegal Zionist activity and sentenced him to eight years at hard labor (his wife was able to escape to Palestine). After two years in a forced labor camp above the Arctic Circle, he was released, along with thousands of other Poles, and joined the Polish Army.

By a stroke of luck, he was sent to Palestine, where he worked as a clerk in Polish headquarters in Jerusalem. He made contact with his old colleagues now in the country and, soon after his discharge in 1943, was elected commander of the clandestine Irgun resistance force; he was then barely thirty years old. From that time until the state's establishment five years later he was a wanted man, living underground constantly.

Fighting the British, Mr. Beigin also had fierce disputes with the Haganah underground, the official defense arm of the Jewish community. He was for striking the British wherever and whenever possible, the Haganah was for "self-restraint" and considered the Irgun's actions irresponsible.

After the U. N. decision to partition Palestine, Mr. Beigin increasingly sent the Irgun out into open fighting, launched an all-out attack on ancient Jaffa from next-door Tel Aviv. When the British left and statehood was proclaimed by other men in a Tel Aviv ceremony in mid-May, 1948, Mr. Beigin came out of hiding and walked the city streets, a free man.

As the war ended and Israel sought to settle down, Mr. Beigin and his Irgun associates created the Herut (Freedom) movement and ran for the Knesset (Parliament) in the first national election. Since then, as head of Herut's Knesset delegation, says the New York Herald Tribune, he has stood for the extreme nationalistic view and has expressed that view brilliantly and in fiery words. (In the last Knesset Herut was the second largest party, with fifteen out of 120 seats as against Mapai's forty.)

The man who has challenged Mr. Ben-Gurion in the current campaign is intent, serious and hard-working. He is up each morning at 5:45 and before 8 he has read all the Hebrew morning papers — there are ten — down to the smallest item. Then it is work and more work until — these days — 1:30 or 2 the next morning.

Mr. Beigin is a prodigious reader of political science and history. For fun he reads the Congressional Record and Hansard, its British counterpart, and can quote speeches from Commons or Congress by heart. Money and what it can buy have no apparent interest for him. The Beigins and their three children live in a cramped and poorly furnished three-and-a-half-room apartment in an old Tel Aviv building.

Ritualistically polite, he will address a small boy as "Adoni" ("Sir") and speak to him with utter seriousness. When a Knesset session ends, he says a formal good by, complete with hand-kissing, to each secretary.

Mr. Beigin proclaims, in effect, that it is time for a change. He accuses Mr. Ben-Gurion of failure abroad and of wasting billions in foreign aid without closing the trade gap or truly absorbing the immigrants. He would strip the country's powerful trade unions of their industrial enterprises as an obstacle to private investment says the New York Herald Tribune. His party clings to its old slogan of "the reunification of the Land of Israel", that is the incorporation of what is now the Kingdom of Jordan into Israel — but now, for the first time, says this can be achieved by peaceful means.

BRAZIL'S JEWS IN A HOSPITABLE HAVEN

Days; in spite of all the Jewish clubs and societies, as well as the nine Jewish newspapers and, finally, for all the many conferences, feasts, and cultural entertainments with a truly Jewish content, assimilation is a creeping menace. One can discern for the future no firm continuation of Jewish culture. This prognosis has not been changed by the influx of about 10,000 new immigrants in the past ten years, mainly from Egypt, Hungary and Israel.

The Yiddish language is evidently losing ground to Portuguese, though there are still five Yiddish weeklies compared with the two Portuguese ones, and a number of books in Yiddish against almost none in Portuguese with a Jewish interest. There are also still more Yiddish than Portuguese conferences, but even these facts point to the progress of assimilation. Hebrew, although growing in extent, cannot replace Yiddish, for it is a taught language, yet Portuguese still imparts too little Yiddishkeit to be of material value to Jewishness.

Education in Jewish schools — some of them Yiddish, some Portuguese, but all with Hebrew as a compulsory subject — has no follow-up in any proper high school. No native teachers and rabbis are forthcoming and no official seminary exists to produce them. Today Israel remains the only real spiritual reservoir for Jews. For all that, there remain the efforts of the responsible leaders to block the road to assimilation.

Their efforts are evident in the new schools, synagogues and social institutions in the newspapers and conferences, and in the diligent organisation of Jewish clubs and — again on the initiative of the World Jewish Congress — of the students. Brazil can still provide an average annual aliyah of at least a hundred pioneers to Israel in addition to a less productive aliyah from the middle class. For those who have made it their own and their children's country, Brazil remains a hospitable haven where racialism in any form is as good as unknown.

"...devotion to detail"

The demand for Volkswagens grows constantly. It has kept well ahead of expanding production. Today, Volkswagen is more than a car. It is a household word, a standard for what is good honest value. And that is because you, everyone, can actually "see" the quality in a Volkswagen. It is there in every detail, every part. You don't have to be an engineer to appreciate the way the doors are made. Open them. Close them. They shut solidly with the sound of authority. The hood is the same—no gaping spaces where it meets the body. This is what experts examine with pleasure—find technically excellent.

Such devotion to detail you find in every single part. This makes Volkswagen what it is.

And it was Volkswagen who pioneered in mass-production such outstanding features as engine in the rear, air cooling, torsion-bar suspension on all four wheels—all sound engineering principles which other manufacturers are now adopting.

While Volkswagen is continually improving, the same basic design has been maintained. That is why the 100,000 Volkswagen owners in Canada enjoy such a high resale value for their cars.

And everywhere you go, you will find efficient Volkswagen service. From coast to coast, 280 authorized Volkswagen service centres are equipped with genuine parts. Factory-trained mechanics give you efficient, inexpensive service. All this is backed by a central 5-million dollar Spare Parts Depot at Toronto.

The car, the parts, the service—devotion to detail in every way.

Mission To Go To Europe To Determine 1960 U.J.A. Goals

The sixth overseas study mission of the United Jewish Appeal, the largest such contingent ever to make the trip to Europe and Israel for a survey of UJA-sponsored aid programs and requirements in Europe and Israel, is composed of 115 leaders of the nation-wide United Jewish Appeal campaign, whose main object will be to find out the needs which face Jewish immigrants of recent years to Israel and Jews elsewhere in Europe and the Moslem countries who depend upon the UJA agencies for vital aid programs. Mission members will assemble on Saturday night, November 7, in Vienna, Austria, and a full report to the 22nd annual national conference of the United Jewish Appeal will take place during December 11, 12, 13, in New York at the Statler-Hilton Hotel. Their findings will weigh heavily in determining the 1960 UJA campaign objectives, which will be formulated there.

Leaders of the mission include Edward M. M. Warburg, of New York, UJA honorary chairman; and Morris W. Berinstein, of Syracuse, N. Y., UJA general chairman. When the mission members meet for dinner at the Imperial Hotel, in Vienna, on Saturday night, August 7, for a two-and-a-half-day conference, they will meet with officials of the Joint Distribution Committee and of the Jewish Agency for Israel. The Joint Distribution Committee is a constituent agency of the UJA. It carries out welfare and rehabilitation programs in Israel and 25 other countries. The Jewish Agency operates with funds remitted by the United Israel Appeal, another constituent agency of the UJA. The agency carries out immigration and immigrant absorption work in Israel.

Study mission members will hear reports from representatives of the JDC and of the Jewish Agency, dealing with the situation facing needy Jews in Europe, North Africa, and the Middle East, and with the emigration phase of the Jewish Agency's operations. On November 9, the members will leave Vienna for Israel via El Al Airlines. In Israel they will study requirements for the immigration absorption program now being carried out with UJA funds. These programs seek to alleviate and overcome a huge backlog of unmet immigrant absorption needs affecting some 400,000 immigrants of recent years who are not entirely self-sufficient.

The mission will confer with Israeli Government officials and with officials of the Jewish Agency. They will be welcomed by U.S. Ambassador Ogden Reid at the U.S. Embassy. They will be received by President Yitzhak Ben Zvi and be the guests of Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion at a banquet in Jerusalem and will also attend functions at which Foreign Minister Golda Meir and Finance Minister Levi Eshkol will speak. The main part of their stay in Israel will consist of visits to immigrant farm settlements, irrigation projects, immigrant villages, Israeli homes, institutions for therapy, and care of immigrants. All mission members meet their own expenses on the trip.

The members will investigate conditions among immigrants still living in immigrant shanty-towns, where more than 85,000 men, women, and children are still living for lack of housing. Most of these dwellers have been in the shanty-towns for more than five years. The mission will study the needs of more than 400 immigrant farm settlements on which 130,000 peoples are settled. These farmsteads are still not economically self-sufficient. They represent one of the major problems of immigrant absorption in Israel.

Mission members will begin their departure for the United States on November 20th.

The United Jewish Appeal is the largest voluntary agency raising funds for distressed Jews overseas, immigrants in Israel, and newcomers to America. The UJA finances the work of its member agencies, the United Israel Appeal, the Joint Distribution Committee, and the New York Association for New Americans. The United HIAS Service also benefits from the UJA Special Fund for aid to immigrants, for immigrant aid programs in countries other than Israel.

Mexico Offers Fascinating Scenery Variety Of Interest, For Every Tourist

Smoothing out the path of the tourist, the Mexican Government has issued a ruling which spares incoming airline passengers the inconvenience of having their baggage checked. Incoming travelers are required only to fill out baggage declarations listing baggage contents, with the exception of personal belongings. And modern transportation, such as Eastern Air Lines "Golden Falcon" flights which bring passengers non-stop from New York or New Orleans to Mexico City, has made a visit to Mexico a pleasure.

Mexico City is a sophisticated and lovely world capital, quite worthy of the often applied label "Paris of the New World". Because of the varied life in Mexican resorts and cities, the visitor should plan his or her wardrobe carefully. The what-to-wear is solved in Mexico City by sport dresses and tailored suits for women and by suits and ties for men. Women may also want to bring along a cocktail dress and dancing shoes. For the capital and all of Mexico, the one absolute requirement is comfortable walking shoes.

In such mountain cities as Taxco, women wear blouses and skirts, or cotton dresses; men can wear sports shirts here and forget about ties. For the beach resorts such as Acapulco, strapless dresses, shorts, slacks, open shirts and sandals are in good taste.

Shopping in Mexico is a delight bounded only by the amount of money the visitor has allotted for this purpose. Real bargains can be had, particularly in silver, leather goods, pottery, handwoven textiles, and handwoven baskets. The best advice any tourist can be given in regard to shopping is that he buy in reputable shops.

Those whose tastes run to sports will be able to see baseball, boxing, wrestling and bicycle races as well as horse racing in Mexico City. The national sport is jai alai, and professional matches can be seen every night but Monday at the Fronton Mexico. Bullfights are held almost every Sunday at the Plaza Mexico or the El Toreo.

Other amusements available in the capital city include a program of regional dances presented bi-weekly. Concerts, opera, plays, an occasional ballet, movies and dancing at one of Mexico City's numerous nightclubs offer varied entertainment. Every visit should include an evening of listening to mariachis, the wandering musicians who are found in many parts of the city.

The Zocalo, hub of Mexico's life since the Azteca, is the site of the National Palace, which houses the offices of President Lopez Mateos, and the treasury department, and was constructed on the site of the Indian Emperor Montezuma's palace. The Cathedral on the Zocalo, which might be the largest and most beautiful in America, dates from 1667.

In addition to the capital, there are three other cities that receive top priority from the visitor to Mexico. The first is Cuernavaca, one hour's drive south of Mexico City, which is colorful with luxuriant vegetation, brilliant flowers that grow profusely due to the semi-tropical climate. Ninety-nine miles from Mexico City is Taxco, the silver city, picturesque and lovely, which has been declared a national monument in an effort to protect it from change. As a result, the steep, cobblestone streets are as they were hundreds of years ago. A mecca for artists, the city also is a center for the creation of silver jewelry.

The Riviera of North America, Acapulco, is an hour's flight from Mexico City. Here besides the Pacific, the rich and poor alike play under the sun and under the stars, and dream of, or experience, romances. Hotel accommodations range from the ultra-plush down to the pensiones where the students and other impoverished or thrifty visitors can stay for 10 pesos a day. Excellent beaches and grandeur of the Pacific coast-line make Acapulco a spot of loveliness despite commercialism.

Dutch Ships Present Varied Cruise List

The Holland-America Line will operate its winter cruise program during the 1959-'60 season with the world's two largest cruise ships, the new flagship Rotterdam and the luxury liner Nieuw Amsterdam, in addition to the Statendam and the Maasdam. All four ships are entirely air-conditioned and stabilizer equipped with the largest selection of rooms-with-facilities hitherto unavailable. Offering a continuous series from December through April, fifteen Caribbean cruises ranging in length from eight-and a half to seventeen days have been scheduled.

The first of the Christmas and New Year's cruises will be that of the Nieuw Amsterdam, on December 18, for sixteen days to St. Thomas, Martinique, Barbados, Grenada, La Guaira, Curacao, Kingston, Montego Bay and Nassau. On December 21, the Maasdam will depart on a thirteen-day cruise to San Juan, St. Thomas, Curacao and Kingston.

The Nieuw Amsterdam sails on January 5 for an eight-and-a-half day cruise to Port-au-Prince and Havana. The Statendam makes her first winter cruise on January 8, sailing for fourteen days to San Juan, St. Thomas, Martinique, St. Lucia, Barbados and Havana.

Wax Museum Is Miami's Newest Sight To Visit

Miami's newest sightseeing attraction is the Wax Museum, a half-million dollar structure of classical architecture housing wax figures of historical, political and sports fame, in settings and costumes so detailed they appear life-like. The museum is at the "Gateway to Miami" on U. S. Highway No. 1.

Among the forty-two dioramas depicted are the Yalta Conference with Roosevelt, Churchill and Stalin; the death of Davy Crockett at the battle of the Alamo; the discovery of Florida by Ponce de Leon, and an informal gathering of athletic heroes Jack Dempsey, Joe DiMaggio, Babe Ruth and Lou Gehrig.

The unfamiliar likenesses of Mrs. Julia D. Tuttle and Henry M. Flagler, pioneers in the founding of Miami, prove a revelation to residents and visitors alike. It was Mrs. Tuttle who sent a sprig of orange blossoms to Flagler, dramatizing the mild climate of the village at the south-eastern tip of the Florida peninsula. Her act led to Miami's emergence as a major city.

A staff of artists and technicians worked for years under the direction of Albert Chartier and Robert Tancrede, internationally known sculptors, to create and assemble the figures for the 10,000 square feet of space at the Wax Museum.

Tape recordings describe each scene at the push of a button and, in the diorama of painter Toulouse-Lautrec at Le Moulin Rouge, can-can music heightens the authenticity.

Jamaica's Industrial Expansion Adds New Strength To A Country Known For Tourist Attraction, Too

The Jamaica Industrial Development Corporation, of which Harold A. Braham is general manager, has opened an office in Toronto, at 11 Adelaide Street West, to handle inquiries from Canadian industries interested in establishing in Jamaica. It is felt that if Canadian-owned plants are located, or relocated in Jamaica, the improved economic position of the Jamaicans will create a large and better market for products made in Canada. Jamaica has a fast-growing and available labor force, with unions co-operating with the government to help realize the goal of a strong, growing country, changing gradually from a strictly agricultural nation to an industrial one.

The Jamaica Industrial Development Corp., was established in 1952, with its members appointed by the government. The corporation is authorized to deal directly with Canadian industrial interests to the point where it can make specific plans and arrangements for the financing, renting, building and leasing of plants. The main function, right now, is to attract the lighter type of industries, such as textiles, light metals and fabrics.

The high quality of Jamaican labour has long been recognized in other parts of the world. Jamaicans played an important part in the development of the Cuban sugar industry, early in the century, and helped to build the Panama Canal. In Great Britain today, Jamaican labour is in active demand, and employed in many sections of industry. Additional industrial training will be provided by a new Technical College, which will provide advanced technical education for the Jamaican in specific areas of manufacturing and service.

Jamaica is in a strategic location, serviced easily by plane and boat. For instance, Trans-Canada Air Lines offers frequent tourist service to Montego Bay and Kingston, and starting January 1, will provide luxury Super Constellation Service. B.W.I.A. flies there from Miami, and other Caribbean points.

First-class city and inter-urban bus service connects all points in the Island. International bank branches, insurance companies, the rise of new industry, large increases in capital investment and per capita income, all show the pattern of a new industrial life being established.

Imported as well as local raw materials are today being used to turn out products which are being exported throughout the Caribbean and the world. For example, paper boxes are being produced for export to South and Central America and Haiti; buttons for export to the United States; knitted wear and cotton cloth are being exported to Canada; and garment factories have recently been established, the products of which will be exported to such distant points as London and Johannesburg.

Jamaica-made shoes are being sold throughout the West Indies; cosmetics are being shipped to British Guiana and the Panama Canal Zone; table jellies to Australia, Britain and Canada; and citrus juice processed in Jamaica is competing on the London market. Jamaica's total trade with foreign countries has increased by 180% since 1950. The base of its expanding economy is being rapidly diversified and broadened. While employment has by no means fully utilized the abundant labour pool, the Island is enjoying a measure of prosperity unknown in the past century.

The Island is renowned for its climate and exotic natural beauty. Extreme heat is rare, although the sun shines almost every day in the year. Coastal temperatures seldom surpass 80 degrees Fahrenheit or fall below 70. Strong ocean breezes temper the atmosphere, and variation between winter and summer seasons is slight.

The city of Kingston offers every modern convenience including metered taxis; air-conditioned cinemas with current motion pictures from the U. S. and United Kingdom; modern stores and shops selling locally produced goods as well as exclusive merchandise from all parts of the world; supermarkets where foods catering to every dietary taste can be obtained; well-run restaurants, beauty parlours, tailors, cleaners and specialty shops.

Health conditions are excellent in Jamaica. The year-around sunshine, available fresh foods, warm waters, and recreational activities have made the Island a haven for health-seekers, who are attracted from many distant points. Spas and mineral baths are available to visitor and resident. Modern water treatment plants exist in populous areas, and pasteurized milk is available in centres of population.

Medical facilities are of a high standard. Jamaica has a total of 31 hospitals, which are staffed by well-trained personnel. The University College of the West Indies Medical School is graduating local doctors who join large numbers of foreign-trained physicians in staffing the hospitals and establishing practices.

Under the 1952 Industrial Development Corporation Law, members of the Corporation are appointed from among men who are qualified and who have had experience in and shown capacity in matters relating to industry, trade, finance, science or administration.

The expansion of existing industries and the establishment of new industries is therefore of prime importance to this Corporation. Expansion of existing industries and successful establishment of new industries over the past five years is conclusive evidence that the substantial pool of intelligent and ambitious labour which exists in Jamaica is capable of producing industrial workers with a high standard of efficiency. Liberal tax relief laws which have been enacted are proof of the Government's desire to harness new capital and technical know-how to Jamaica's industrial expansion programme.

How To Travel In Comfort With Small Children

Planning a plane trip with a small child? Travelling with a child can be fun, but it also can turn into an endurance test if the youngsters are allowed to get out of control. Result: a harassed parent, a tired and irritated child, an unhappy stewardess and an annoyed group of fellow-passengers.

Prepare the child for what he'll see and do. If you have time, take him to the airport a week ahead and let him see the planes and passengers. He'll see other children arriving or departing. Explain about take-off, meal service, lavatories, landings and other things he'll encounter.

See that he's rested before you leave home. A tired child makes a poor passenger. Take along a familiar toy or book; also a couple of "niblets." He may not want a full meal, but he will enjoy an occasional cookie.

Tell the child, in story form, about the part of the country over which he'll fly. Then he'll enjoy it when the stewardess calls attention to rivers or cities.

Have a briefing in good manners. "Please" and "thank you" will make the stewardess happy when she brings water, a pillow or shows other special attention.

Mothers with infants should bring sufficient formula so baby will be fed on schedule even though emergency baby kits are carried. The stewardess will co-operate with meal plans.

The final suggestion calls for the parent to keep calm and serene and junior will follow the example.

Take a well stocked first aid kit on a vacation trip to take care of cuts, burns and scratches. Plenty of small ready-made dressing will take care of minor wounds.

Jamaica Shops Offer Fine Native Craft Work, British And European Imports, In Colourful Display

Shopping forms an important part of a vacation in Jamaica. A wide range of merchandise, from choice imported articles to exquisite examples of Jamaican handcraft, is available in the island, adding more fun to the pleasures of the holiday.

A strong claim for recognition as the buy-spot of the Caribbean is made by Jamaica, whose fine, modern shops and native bazaars offer an extensive as well as selective range of goods from the main manufacturing centers of the world. This is in addition to a wealth of items made by the island's skilled craftsmen and women.

Free-port shopping is a special incentive, offering the attractive advantage of making purchases at incredibly low prices and making shopping a genuine money-saving feature of a Jamaican vacation. There are more than 40 freeport shops on the island. This season, the range of goods that can be purchased in them has been made even more extensive than ever before.

Many experienced travelers have discovered that Jamaica is a shopper's paradise. There are excellent shops in Kingston, the island's capital and one of its five resort areas. There are also modern, attractive shops in the other resort areas, notably the North Shore playground of Montego Bay and Ocho Rios, where hotel shops and smart shopping centers have been established.

Vacationers have already made the delightful discovery of the extent to which shopping can add to their holiday fun in Jamaica They have added another "s" to the list of things they can do in the island: to the delights of sun, sand, sea and sight-seeing, they now add shopping as a must on their pleasure program.

In Kingston's up-to-date department stores, in the specialty shops and hotel shops in the main tourist centers, in the gay and colorful native bazaars and markets, visitors can buy virtually everything required for personal use as well as for gifts.

British and European imports are high on the list. The island's shops are treasure troves for shoppers in quest of such merchandise as British woolen apparel and accessories, English leather goods, English and Scottish knitwear in hosiery and sweaters, fine British suitings, Irish linens, Italian silks, Scandinavian ceramics and French gloves.

Articles made in Jamaica are ideal for souvenirs, gifts to friends, or for rare personal possessions. A wide range of locally made goods can be purchased. The categories range from straw goods to art objects, and include Jamaican painting and sculpture.

Headquarters for high-class Jamaican handcraft — sunbright straw goods, exquisite filigree jewelry, gay hand-painted textiles, artistic wood-work — is the Victoria Crafts Market, the island's arts and crafts show window at the foot of King Street, the capital city's main stem.

Conveniently situated in the heart of downtown Kingston and at the main marine gateway to the city, the Crafts Market is one of the places to purchase Jamaican straw baskets, handbags, shoes, ashtrays, lamps, cigarette boxes, bookends and other articles made from Jamaican wood; native pottery, shell, ceramic and silver-filigree jewelry, hand-painted textiles, needle-work, as well as world-famous rum and cigars.

American Society Of Travel Agents Serves The Industry In Eighty Countries

On February 16, 1931, about forty travel agents, most of them from New York, met at the Hotel Lexington, in New York. They were eager to set up a society which would proclaim their business stability, ethical standards and expert professional knowledge to the public and to the transportation companies. They called their organization the American Steamship and Tourist Agent's Association.

By 1939 the insignia of the association were on display in thirty-three states of the United States (organized as ten chapters) and in Belgium, Bermuda, Brazil, Canada, Gibraltar, Algeria, Egypt, Greece, Cuba, Jamaica, France, England, Hong Kong, Italy, India, Holland, Hungary, Palestine, Mexico, Venezuela, Trinidad, Yugoslavia, Portugal, Poland, Norway, Romania, Switzerland and Puerto Rico.

The small group which began the association had been congratulated throughout the industry for bringing A. S. T. A. in eight years to a position of international recognition for its high standards and as a force for the achievement of better conditions throughout the travel industry. In 1939 there were 600 members, both active and allied.

World War II threatened to destroy the work which had been so painfully accomplished. A. S. T. A. established a headquarters office in New York to see that the society records were kept up and to insure a nucleus for post-war reorganization. Many agents were actually forced out of business and A. S. T. A. dues were lowered to $10 a year. Overseas members couldn't get money out of their countries, but their names were kept on the books and their dues collected when the war ended.

In 1944, its name became the American Society of Travel Agents and since 1945 A. S. T. A. has increased its membership by more than 800 per cent. It has about 2,000 agency members in the United States and Canada, 750 agency members abroad and a total of close to 5,300 members from eighty countries and territories.

It has as allied members air lines, steamship companies, railroads, bus lines, hotels, resorts, government tourist offices and other travel interests. Each year A. S. T. A. holds a World Travel Congress at which trends of the year to come are discussed. Alternately these conventions are held in the United States and abroad.

A. S. T. A. feels that in its society affairs and in the day-to-day business of its members, it is serving the interest of international understanding. Its recent convention theme was "Peace and Prosperity Through Travel."

Florida Keys Provide Good Fishing, In Colorful Vacation Sites

The Florida Keys, a resort island chain that swings out from the Florida mainland in anchor chain fashion, constitute a colorful 100-mile-long tropical playground for winter visitors. This mangrove and palmstudded area is one of the most unusual vacation spots in the United States.

Rich in history and romantic interest, the islands range in size from some that are no more than mangrove bushes in a sandbank to others several miles long. Of 1,000 keys, with a combined habitable area of about 200 square miles, only sixty are populated.

Knifing through colorful Atlantic and Gulf waters, U. S. Highway 1, the "road that goes to sea," offers motorists an excellent island-hopping thoroughfare, from Key Largo to Key West.

The Atlantic Gulf Stream, a deep blue artery that courses northward several miles offshore, has a tempering influence on the climate of the islands. It is the conversation piece among fishermen. It is where the much-sought-after sailfish, dolphin and other deep-sea species roam.

On the Gulfside, wily bonefish, snapper and kingfish attract enthusiastic anglers over the flats and onto the bridges. Key Largo, thirty miles long and largest of the islands, is the entrance-way to Florida's southernmost resort chain. At the lower end of the slender key is Tavernier, named for a pirate associate of Jean La-Fitte, who preyed on offshore shipping from a creek hideout between Key Largo and Plantation Key.

Tavernier is headquarters for Audubon Society boat tours beginning in mid-November. Two and three-hour tours are available to the near-by island roosting spots of thousands of spoonbills, egrets and herons. The birds present an unbelievable sight during spectacular flyaways.

Islamorada, fifteen miles from Key Largo, is a larger charter boat base. An impressive sight offshore are the white charter boats etched against the deep blue of sky and stream. Outriggers point skyward, skipping bait flops from wave to wave, a furious sailfish arches over water in a desperate leap, the cry of strike and the battle's on. Bone fishermen experience thrills aplenty when they cast into the gulf waters of the inshore flats off Islamorada.

Fire-traps exist in many homes where least suspected. Conditions that may become increasingly dangerous are faulty electrical wiring or equipment, worn stairs or floors, and other spots in need of repairs.

Canada's Food Rules provide a list of the five groups of foods necessary to good health through a balanced diet. These groups, which should be represented in the daily diet, include milk, vegetables, fruits, cereals and meat, fish or eggs.

Small Island Areas In The Caribbean Are Fascinating Places, Reached Easily By Air

BY ELEANOR EARLY, IN THE NEW YORK TIMES

Remote islands of the West Indies are now accessible for the first time to air travelers seeking off-beat destinations. All-weather, hard-surface air strips have been laid on the virtually unknown islands of Anguilla, Barbuda, Beef, Montserrat and St. Eustatius and on the better known, but heretofore remote, islands of Dominica and Nevis.

All these islands now can be reached by regularly scheduled flights of L. I. A. T. (Leeward Islands Air Transport), whose three small planes make from two to five flights weekly to six of these islands and one flight a week to the strange little island of Barbuda. The L. I. A. T. fleet, subsidized by British West Indian Airways, an affiliate of British Overseas Airways Corporation, consists of two twin-engine Beechcraft Bonanzas and a twin-engine Piper Apache. The line operates under American licenses and planes are inspected by the American Civil Aeronautics Board. They are piloted by Americans.

Hardly anybody outside the West Indies has ever heard of Barbuda where Christopher Codrington, seventeenth century Governor General of the Leeward Islands, bred slaves for his sugar plantations in Antigua, and deer, wild boar and African fowl for his game preserves. The present population of the island is about 1,000, all of whom live in Codrington Village, perhaps the smallest village in the world with an air strip in its front yard.

There are no white people on Barbuda and no criminals. Offenses for which natives are occasionally brought to trial are fighting and using bad language. The courthouse is so small that witnesses stand outside and give testimony through the open door. There are two tractors on the island and an old motor car, a buggy and a Victorian hearse. There is good hunting and excellent fishing.

Residents raise pigeon peas and peanuts and make charcoal for Antigua, thirty-five miles away. This can be reached by Trans-Canada Air Lines, with comfortable, all-tourist service. Barbuda used to be accessible only by native sloops making hazardous voyages over coral reefs, and now, planes call weekly. Many ships have been wrecked off the island, and the waters about it are known as "the graveyard of the Caribbean." Dominica, is generally believed to be the most beautiful island of the Leaser Antilles.

Until World War II, vessels of the Canadian National Steamship Company put in at Roseau every fortnight. Service was discontinued with the outbreak of hostilities, and the island, remained for some years virtually without outside trade or tourists.

Dominica (area, 305 square miles) has the highest and greenest mountains in the West Indies steaming tropical jungles and great rain forests. High among its cloud-drenched peaks is a boiling lake, and in the hills on the farthest side of the mountains live the few Carib Indians remaining in the world. Tourist accommodations in the capital city of Roseau are scarce, and by American standards, rather primitive.

None of the islands are alike. In the old days, Nevis, now shabby and drab, was the gayest and most fashionable of West Indies islands. Once the most important health resort in the Caribbean, it boasted a magnificent eighteenth century hotel called Bath House. The hotel still stands and the baths have been restored.

It is possible to rent rooms in Bath House, hire a cook, and keep house in this rather sad and dilapidated old hostelry. Accommodations may also be had at Golden Rock, a rebuilt sugar estate, on which guest cottages and a swimming pool have been built. Beachlands, a plantation house on the old Nisbet estate, also takes guests.

At Fig Tree Church, Horatio Nelson married the Widow Nisbet. Visitors go to see the old marriage register and to visit the ruins of the house in which Alexander Hamilton was born. There is not much else to do on Nevis.

Anguilla is a flat island with good beaches, no tourist accommodations and no white people; Beef Island, six miles off Tortola in the British Virgins, is a very small island with one hotel (eight double rooms), no cabs, no radio, no telephones. Montserrat, rocky but fertile, raises limes, sea island cotton and tomatoes.

St. Eustatius (called Statia) is a Dutch island, eleven square miles in area. The only place to stay is the clean, quiet Government Guesthouse, with four small bedrooms and two baths. Once Statia was the most important transshipping point in the Leeward Islands. In the middle eighteenth century a hundred ships a day dropped anchor in its deep roadstead.

Now the blue-green harbor is deserted, and only the new air strip gives hope of a brighter future. In 1781, when Holland was at war with England, Admiral Rodney attacked Statia, looted and burned its capital. Today there is little to do but visit the ruins.

Since the Federation of the West Indies came into being, numbers of West Indies islands have begun to dream of tourist business. Their facilities are generally limited, and reservations for transportation and accommodations should be made in advance.

A wide choice of island-hopping air cruises to Puerto Rico and other exotic resorts in the Caribbean Sea is offered by Eastern Air Lines, in cooperation with British West Indian Airways, and United Tours Inc. of Miami.

These air cruises will take advantage of the variety of fares and accommodations ranging from first-class service to the moderate-priced tourist and ultra-economy flights to San Juan, Puerto Rico. San Juan is the 16th century citadel which once dominated the Spanish Main and is today emerging as one of the fastest growing and most progressive cities of the new world.

In San Juan, there are beautiful suburbs of Rio Piedras, Santurce, Isla Grande and the shores of El Condado; the sea fortress of El Morro, and the Casa Blanco (white house) from which Ponce de Leon set forth to seek the "fountain of youth".

Other memorable stops may include nearby St. Thomas in the Virgin Islands; Antigua, with its Fig Tree Drive, a 20-mile loop encircling the city; the still active sugar plantations, and the dockyards where Lord Nelson fitted out his ships of the line and frigates; Martinique, a bit of Old France in the Western World, where Napoleon's Empress Josephine was born; Barbados, a British colony, and Trinidad, home of the Calypso and strolling steel bands.

Curacao, Dutch outpost in the Caribbean, with its floating markets at de Ruyterkade; Port-of-Spain, where colorful people of all nations — Hindus, Moslems, English, French, Dutch, Chinese frequent the Bazaars; Montego Bay and Kingston, in Jamaica, known for beautiful sandy beaches and gay nightlife; Panama City, Balboa, Ancon, and the shipping crossroads of the world which is the Panama Canal Zone, all await a visit.

In El Salvador during a one-day stay, places with such musical and memorable names as Los Planes de Renderos, Puerta del Diablo, El Gran Mirador, Flor Blanca, and Lake Ilopango are on the list of sights to see. In Guatemala, where the native Indians still dress in ancient style and continue to follow many of the customs of their Mayan ancestors, there are boat rides on Lake Atitlan at the feet of still actively smoking volcanoes, and a chance to observe the fascinating marketplace and Indian ceremonials.

Social Agency Services To Adoptive Parents

BY DAVID WEISS, EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR OF THE BARON DE HIRSCH INSTITUTE, OF MONTREAL

Childless couples who seek to fulfil their parenthood through adoption, should be referred to recognized and approved social agencies for this purpose. The community recognizes the validity of adoption as a method by which couples can achieve family life, and therefore provides the safeguards and protection for all parties involved through an accredited social agency. The adoption agency usually deals with such requests through a process known as social casework, and employs professionally trained social workers to administer this service.

The social agency appreciates that adoptive applicants are human beings whose needs and motivations are important, both to them and to a future child, should adoption be decided upon. The adoptive applicants also need an experience with the agency through which they can explore, test out, and clarify their apparent and underlying wishes, concerns and interests in becoming parents. In this way, the applicants and the agency, on behalf of the potential adopted child, are able to arrive at mutually agreed upon decisions which will have lifelong meaning.

The adoption agency as a rule is set-up under private or public auspices, and has requirements and eligibility rules which help to determine whether or not couples may be considered beyond the initial request. The agencies may represent sectarian and denominational interests and, in consequence, be restricted in relation to certain questions such as religion, age, residence, and other legal requirements, all of which are important facts if adoption is to be effectively promoted, and legally consummated.

The social agency has two major concerns in studying adoptive applicants: to ascertain whether or not such couples offer the possibility and opportunities for the child to be placed successfully; and to help such couples to understand whether adoption will meet their needs, and in a manner which will serve as a healthy, growthful experience.

This process is known as casework, and is usually based on a family study in which frequent and regular interviews on a confidential basis are established. The agency wants to know if the applicants are capable of becoming parents who can meet the needs of a given adopted child; and the kind of child for whom they will be best suited. Such a study experience can offer the adoptive applicants a means by which they can grow in understanding of one another. During the course of such studies, either the agency or the adoptive applicants may decide that adoption is not indicated, or desired, or would not meet the specific emotional needs of the couple.

The social agency will usually clarify and communicate decisions at every step of the study. In this way, false hopes, real or unreal expectations can be dealt with in a shared way. The agency will also explain the reasons for necessary delays brought about by the fact that in most localities there are more applicants for children, than there are children available for such placement.

The modern adoption agency will base its decision on a comprehensive evaluation of the marital relationship, the meaning of adoption to each spouse, and the apparent and underlying motivations they present in this plan. The social agency staff will include the caseworker, medical, psychiatric, and psychological consultants who will participate in achieving the most objective understanding of the given applicants, so that an objective decision will be arrived at.

Just as the adoptive applicants will want to know, and have a right to know, as much about the potential child as may be available to them, so too does the social agency want to know all about the applicants, since the future welfare of the child in its care is at stake. How does the couple function; how mature are they emotionally and socially? Can they really grow into parenthood? Is there capacity to handle disappointments and frustrations, flexibility to change in relation to meeting the needs of others? Do they have the ability to give love, guidance, and reasonable protection and stability to a child?

These and other criteria are usually considered in relation to the diagnosis which the social agency seeks to gain in working with the adoptive applicants. Conversely, such applicants usually grow into an awareness and acceptance of their real basic drives toward fulfilling their wish for parenthood through adoption. This experience therefore is meaningful not only in respect to the specific need which brings these applicants to the social agency, but has long-term value in enhancing and deepening their ability and capacity to relate to children and to themselves.

The agency thus seeks to find the best possible home for the limited number of children it has available for adoption. The agency cannot meet all requests because not all applicants really want such a solution to their childlessness, nor can the agency consider placing children in order to rebuild marriages; to provide therapeutic tools, as it were, through a child to help individuals overcome severe emotional disturbances.

When the applicant and the agency truly relate to each other in respect to their need, there is movement toward the fulfilment of the need and mutual understanding which serves the best interest of the child, the adoptive applicants, and the community by providing a secure family life for an otherwise unwanted child whose placement creates a new family unit in society.

Canadian Jewish Congress Head Presents Monument, Quebec Official Unveils It For Bicentenary

The City of Three Rivers and the Canadian Jewish Congress dedicated a monument to the memory of Ezekiel Hart, pioneer of democratic rights who was twice elected member for Three Rivers to the Legislative Assembly of Lower Canada, and twice refused the right to take his seat in the House.

The monument was presented to the city by Samuel Bronfman, president of the Canadian Jewish Congress, as part of the commemorative events of the national bicentenary of Canadian Jewry, and was unveiled by the Hon. J. Paul Beaulieu, minister of trade and commerce who represented Quebec Province.

"Nothing else can better symbolize the bonne entente which reigns supreme in an area for the last 200 years accustomed to finding the basis of understanding between the various ethnic groups and different creeds which merge to form the mosaic of Canadian life," Mr. Bronfman said at the unveiling ceremony held in Champlain Park.

"It is of great interest to recall certain events in the life of Ezekiel Hart, son of Aaron Hart (the first Jew to settle permanently in Canada). This Jewish merchant of this city . . . was very popular with the people of the city, and it seemed quite natural that he was thrice asked to represent the electors at Parliament. Twice he accepted the call and was twice returned. History tells us," Mr. Bronfman continued, "that he was the victim of a political crisis, and that it was not so much religious prejudice, but political expediency on the part of Hart's adversaries, which resulted in the technicalities of oath-taking" (that kept him from office).

"However, we are gathered here today to recall the good judgment which nearly a quarter of a century after the drama was played, resulted in the act of the removal of all previous disabilities."

Mr. Bronfman then drew attention to the tablet on the monument which reads in part:

"This plaque, dedicated to the City of Trois Rivieres recalls the acts of amity and democracy of its citizens who in 1807 and 1808 elected Ezekiel Hart, a citizen of the Hebrew faith as its member of the Legislative Assembly of Lower Canada thus inspiring the historic enactment in 1832 of the recognition of full civil rights for all citizens".

Mr. Beaulieu paid tribute to the role Jews have played in the history and development of Quebec, referring to Ezekiel Hart as a pioneer of democratic rights.

"In Quebec," he said "we who represent the largest ethnic group (French-Canadian), although a minority group in Canada, understand your position throughout the world. My presence here is not as an individual but as a representative of the government in its recognition of your contribution to the progress and development of this province."

Prior to the unveiling the guests gathered in the office of the Hon. Laurent Paradis, mayor of Three Rivers, where Mr. Bronfman was presented with a book on the life of Aaron and Ezekiel Hart. It was written by Raymond Douville, taken refuge in a villa near Florence belonging to the San Marino envoy to the Vatican. Another book, "The Passionate Sightseer," subtitled "From the Diaries of Bernard Berenson," is scheduled for publication next March by Simon & Schuster and Harry N. Abrams.

RENOWNED CRITIC

Mr. Berenson had refused to leave Italy, he declared in "Rumor and Reflection," first because of his wife's physical condition and secondly because of his philosophical condition, says the New York Times. He felt too identified with the "deeply humanized majority of Italians" to desert them, he wrote. Beyond that, he was curious, he admitted.

There, near his own villa and having access to his library, he remained during the war, acting, as Mr. Taylor wrote, as "the most civilized war correspondent of all times." When he returned to his villa after the arrival of Allied troops in 1944, he spent a week in bed recovering from the shock of devastation to his beloved Florence. Mary Berenson, who, as a Quaker, had been permitted to remain at home, died at the villa on March 23, 1945.

After the war, Mr. Berenson continued to live quietly at I Tatti, receiving guests and exchanging conversation and criticism with anyone who appeared. His library, which he bequeathed with the villa to Harvard University for students, remained open to all — even to his enemies, he noted.

His work pattern continued until he was past 90. He arose at 6 A.M., worked (this was "to write for print," he said) until 10 a.m. The rest of the day he devoted to reading and research and to his favorite relaxations, walking and talking. His "talking" was almost as famous as his scholarship. He was known as a brilliant and often caustic conversationalist.

Mr. Berenson was a member of the American Academy of Art and Letters, a foreign member of the Italian Lincei, Associate of the Belgian Academy and a foreign member of the Norwegian Academy. He held the British Academy Serena medal for Italian studies.

In the spring of 1956 the University of Florence presented to Mr. Berenson an honorary Doctor of Letters and Philosophy degree for his "vast and untiring work in the field of culture", says the New York Times. He was named an honorary member of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences on May 15, 1958.

President Nathan M. Pusey, of Harvard University, issued the following statement on learning of Mr. Berenson's death:

"I am deeply saddened to learn of the death of Bernard Berenson, a distinguished son of Harvard whose gracious presence and confident taste have greatly influenced art and letters in the United States and the Western world.

"Harvard and Mr. Berenson had much discussion during the latter's lifetime concerning the future of his beautiful I Tatti. We now understand that he has left his estate and a major part of his personal property to the university. We are deeply grateful.

"This bequest implies a great responsibility and opportunity for Harvard and will require long and careful planning with Mr. Berenson's executors so that his wishes can be carried out to the greatest advantage of education and the arts. This we are eager to do."

Stephen Berger, 32 Elderwood Drive, Toronto, has been selected to be the guest of honour at this year's Negev Dinner, of the Jewish National Fund. He lived the first thirty-nine years of his life in the sheltered middle-class atmosphere of pre-war Europe. He was born in Hungary, went to gymnasium in that country and in Germany, and pursued his engineering career in Berlin and Brussels. War's outbreak compelled him to seek a haven in Portugal where he shed out an existence along with many other hard-pressed refugees until 1944 when he was able to move to Canada. Starting as a research engineer with the Ontario Hydro, he switched in a short while to a business of his own and, for the past four years, has been the general manager of a development company. Almost from the first day of his arrival in Toronto, Stephen Berger has taken an active part in communal affairs. Volunteering as a canvasser in the toy group of the United Jewish Appeal, he rose in the ranks until 1953 when he was appointed co-chairman of the Appeal. He was elected president of the United Jewish Welfare Fund; is a vice-president of the Zionist Organization of Canada; treasurer of the Toronto Zionist Council; vice-president of the Jewish Family and Child Service; past chairman of the Boards of the United Jewish Welfare Fund and the Jewish National Fund; chairman of the foundation committee of the Jewish National Fund; and serves on the boards of: Mount Sinai Hospital, Associated Hebrew Schools, Home for the Aged; is president of the Toronto Technion Society; a member of the Social Planning Committee of Metropolitan Toronto; chairman of the Agency-Campaign Liaison Executive Committee of the United Community Fund of Greater Toronto; and of the Campaign Executive Committee of the United Appeal of Metropolitan Toronto. He is married to the former Dr. Edith Steinbach; and they have two sons: John Vaughan Berger, a graduate engineer; and Michael Thomas Berger, a student in Commerce and Finance at the University of Toronto. BEN-GURION

"If the people want to give any party a majority," said the Progressives, "they can do so by proportional representation. What this country needs is not party rule, but as broad a coalition as possible." As for the district system of elections, that would "foster regional, local interests instead of over-all national interests."

To win an absolute majority in November's election, Mr. Ben-Gurion's party would have to score truly major gains, says the New York Herald Tribune. Mapai held forty seats in the last Knesset, and needs sixty-one out of 120 seats for an absolute majority. Few observers believe it can be done.
